The Challenge

Mobile phones are part of modern life, but in the classroom they are one of the greatest barriers to concentration.

Even when “banned,” phones often remain in pockets, distracting students and consuming valuable teaching time.

Research shows the impact:

- A Policy Exchange study found that schools with effective phone bans were more than twice as likely to be rated Outstanding by Ofsted.
- GCSE outcomes were equivalent to 1-2 grades higher in these schools compared to peers in schools with looser policies.
- Excessive mobile use is linked to poorer attainment, reduced wellbeing, and disrupted sleep patterns (University of Birmingham, 2025).

Policies alone aren't enough. Enforcement is the missing piece.

The Solution

Clario is a simple, secure signal blocking pouch system that ensures phones are out of sight and out of mind during lessons.

- At the start of the day or class, students place their phones into the Clario pouch.
- The signal blocking pouch locks securely, preventing access.
- Phones stay with the student, avoiding arguments about confiscation or liability.
- At break, lunch, or home time, unlocking devices positioned outside the phone free zone, can be used by students to unlock their pouches.

The process is quick, fair, and consistent — no grey areas, no exceptions.
